PREFACE

Who's Who in Irad first appeared in 1995, when the Herald was two years old and the territory had a legislature, a governor and a great many new names that our readers wanted to put faces to. It has appeared every year since, with the single exception of 2007. This is the thirty-first edition.

Its purpose is unchanged: to give, in a small compass, the plain facts of the lives of men and women whose work or office makes them of public interest in Irad, wherever they live. Inclusion is decided by the editors alone. It is not bought, it cannot be refused, and it implies neither praise nor blame. The book records offices held; it does not judge how they were held.

Each June the editors send a questionnaire to everyone entered in the previous edition and to those proposed for the first time. Most entries are printed as the biographees returned them, shortened to the house style. Where no questionnaire came back, the editors have compiled the entry from public records, court lists, the Official Gazette and the files of the Herald; such entries are marked with a dagger (†) and are usually short. A biographee who wishes to correct or extend an entry is asked to write to the editors, and will receive a questionnaire in good time for the next edition. The facts are given as at 1 October 2026.

Entries are made under the name by which a person is known in public life. Where the Soviet registration of a surname differs, it is given after the date of birth. Those who use the patronymic form (uulu,kyzy) are entered under their own given name, so that BEKTUR Zhumabek uulu will be found among the B's. The letters*ı*,ñ,ö and*ü* are filed with*i*,n,o and*u*.

TheHistorical Section at the back of the book contains Iradis whose deaths have been recorded, from the founders of the modern state to the artists of the last century, together with those removed from the main list since the previous edition. The editors are always glad to hear of a death that has escaped them.

Portraits are reproduced from photographs supplied by the biographees or held in the Herald's library.

The editors thank the many readers, offices and institutions that sent corrections in the past year, and the staff of the Herald's library, without whom the book could not be made.

HOW TO READ AN ENTRY

Each entry opens with the name in bold, the surname in capitals, followed by the present office or calling. Then come, where known, the date and place of birth, parents, marriage, children, education, career, publications or works, decorations, clubs and recreations, religion and an address for correspondence. Dates are given in full where the biographee has supplied them, and as a year where only the year is a matter of record. An address is not necessarily a residence.

The Herald regrets that it cannot forward letters to biographees, or say why a name does not appear. A name may be absent because its bearer has left public life, because the editors have not yet been able to confirm the facts, or because space is limited.
